CLOCKSS

A Trusted Community-Run Archive

From Prototype to Production

The founding members of the CLOCKSS pilot program are pleased to announce that CLOCKSS will advance to active operations in mid-2008. Two years ago, scholarly publishers and research libraries, challenged by the responsibility to preserve the digital assets of the community, joined forces to build a prototype for a global dark archive. Their unique collaboration focused on creating an archive “cooperative” with publishers and libraries running the archive together.

Distributed Preservation: Proven and Sustainable

Built on open source LOCKSS™ (Lots of Copies Keep Stuff Safe) technology, the CLOCKSS archive comprises geographically-dispersed nodes located at major research libraries, into which e-content is routinely ingested and preserved. Content stored in CLOCKSS cannot be accessed until a trigger event is deemed to have occurred and the CLOCKSS board votes to “light up” the affected titles and restore access to them again. Within the past year, CLOCKSS experienced two trigger events and responded by releasing the endangered content at CLOCKSS host organizations, making it free to all without need of a subscription.

Libraries and Publishers in Charge

With commitment from Elsevier, Wiley, Nature Publishing Group, American Physiological Society, bepress, and other premier publishers to deposit their titles, and from libraries across the world to act as archive nodes, CLOCKSS is currently incorporating as a not-for-profit organization and will begin operations soon thereafter. Libraries and publishers worldwide are invited to help guide and govern CLOCKSS.
